

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSIONS AND SUGGESTIONS

5.1 Conclusions

Reading is an active thinking process where a reader uses both important textual information and prior understanding of that information to comprehend the passage. To improve the students' ability in reading skill, the procedure text can be a way to improve it. It proved by the result of students' ability to find the generic structure in procedure text.

In this research, I found the students in junior high school students' of SMP Negeri 2 Tolangohula had already to find the generic structure especially in procedure text. It was proven both first and second instrument, most of them were categorize in excellent level. As we know that, the generic structure of procedure text consists of aim, materials / ingredient and steps. In this case, many students obtained 4 point for question number 1 or in the other word; most of them answered the aim correctly. While for the question 2 and 3, several students got less than 4 point because some of the ingredient and steps was ignored thus the answers were not completely.

5.2 Suggestions

Based on conclusion above, it suggested that the students should improve their reading ability. Reading procedure text is one of interesting way to improve it because it can make the students enjoy and feel the make something. Therefore, the students will be more interested to read.

Meanwhile, for the teacher as the main element in teaching and learning process, they should make the classroom situation to be more enjoy, and they should have various ways and strategies to simulate the students' interest in reading. The ways will be applied is ought to be more easy comfortable, so, that the students will be fun and enjoy the learning

For the further researcher, it suggested in order to carry out another research about English reading, but in different method. I hope this research can give valuable contribution for the further research.
