

Chapter 5

Conclusion and Suggestion

4.1 Conclusion

From the explanation and discussion above, the writer concludes that there are differences and similarities between derivational suffixes in English and Balinese language. Those are:

- a. The differences that the writer found, there are three differences of English and Balinese derivational suffixes. They are found in the word class verb to adjective, adjective to noun and adjective to adverb.
- b. The similarity of both languages is only found in the word classes of noun to verb, verb to noun and adjective to verb.

4.2 Suggestion

Based on conclusion above, the writer wanted to give some suggestion. As follow:

- a. It is expected that this research could be reference to the subsequent researchers who are interested to do research related to this research.
- b. It is expected that this research will give information for reader about how to do research about contrastive analysis between two or more language.
- c. The writer realizes that there still less of people who are interested to analyze Balinese language. The writer hopes to all of Balinese society who are care with Balinese language should do research in preserve and develop it.
- d. The writer realizes that this research still far away from perfect. Therefore, the writer expects constructive criticism and suggestions for the perfection of this research.

