

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

1.1 Conclusion

Based on the analysis of research about contrastive analysis between English and Buginese assimilation that have done, the researcher stated some resulted of the research, those are:

1. Both of English and Buginese have assimilation of place and also assimilation of manner. In English words “Sad girl” are the example of Assimilation of Place and word “Soldier” is the example of assimilation of manner. In Buginese, assimilation of place for example words “Macenning mo” and the assimilation of manner for example is the words “Batakkaluku”.
2. The changed sound of English assimilation is more various than Buginese assimilation. For example; sound /t/ and /d/.
3. The changed sound in Buginese assimilation is only / / sound
4. In English, a sound can only make one kind of assimilation. However, in Buginese, one sound can make both assimilation of place and also assimilation of manner. For example; in English sound /t/ is changed into sound /p/ is only assimilation of place. In Buginese, sound / / is changed into sound /p/ is assimilation of place and also assimilation of place
5. In Buginese, it is possible that in assimilation a new sound combines with followed sound and makes another new sound. For example words “Bottimparu” where / / sound is changed into /m/ sound and /m sound combines with /p/ sound to make /mpa/ sound.

1.2 Suggestion

Based on the conclusion above, the researcher would like to give some suggestion as follow:

1. In comparing two languages, the learner should use contrastive analysis technique. It will help the students to find out the similarities and differences between both of the languages.
2. The students should know more about the differences and similarities between two or more languages, because by recognizing it make the students easy to learn the languages
3. The students should study more about assimilation in English and other languages. So that the students can easily to learn about sound and pronunciation
4. The English Department students may conduct further research by using the contrastive analysis technique in another area such as vocabulary, grammar etc.