Chapter 5: Conclusion and Suggestion

This chapter is the last chapter of this research that is divided into two parts; conclusion and suggestion of the research. Thereby, this chapter also will become the closing of the research and the short explanation about the whole of research that was conducted.

Conclusion

Based on the explanation in the findings found by the researcher and the discussion in the previous chapter about directive acts that were used in the Endless Love movie, there are some conclusions that can be drawn about this research. The researcher has identified one of the types of illocutionary acts which is the directive acts that are used in the Endless Love movie. There are four types of directive acts that the researcher found in the movie such as ordering act, requesting act, prohibiting act, and suggesting act. In fact, the requesting act becomes the most popular type that was used in the movie with 13 utterances, the second is the ordering act with 10 utterances, the next one is prohibiting act with 6 utterances, and the last one is suggesting act with 1 utterance.

Based on the problem statements, the types of directives that appeared in the Endless Love movie are ordering acts, requesting acts, prohibiting acts, and suggesting acts. The dominant type that is used is the requesting act which means people prefer to make the other do something that the researcher believes that the context, the relationship between the speaker and listener, and their conditions can describe the reason of the utterances. A movie is the reflection of social conditions that is made to entertain the audience, which means the directive acts that are used in the movie are mostly done by people in their daily life.

Suggestion

Firstly, the researcher would like to apologize because this research is still full of lacks and weaknesses. Despite this, the researcher hopes this research could be a little help to others who want to know deeply about directive illocutionary acts.

For English Department students, this research can be used as a pragmatic reference, especially speech act. The theory and method can be used and applied in teaching and learning interacting processes.

The next researcher can explore deeper into the directive speech act in the research object of study because there are still many directive speech act studies that can be used as research objects. Additionally, the further researcher can use new theory to analyze directive speech act and pragmatic.

The other suggestion is the subject of the research; the further researcher can explore the connection between linguistics in various kinds of research subjects, such as novel, short story, speech, and daily conversation.
